AN AGE OF IMPROVEMENT.

The Evening News of Kaneas City, although not yet five years old, recognizes that this is an age of improvement. It has just moved into one of the handsomest newspaper buildings in the west; a building erected expressly for it and combining all the conveniences that time and experience can suggest that time and experience can suggest or money secure. In addition, a new Potter perfecting press with a capacity of twenty-five thousand papers an hour, has been added to its mechanical outfit, enabling it to take front rank among the established papers of the

Its short and pithy paragraphs of events happening in the three great states of Missouri, Kansas and Ne-brasks are alone worth more than the cost of the paper. You can send your order direct to The Evening News, 909 Wyandotte street, Kansas City, Mo., or hand to your postmaster. Don't

Where Language Falls,

Language is hardly strong enough to express my admiration of the merits of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is the best remedy for croup and whooping cough I have ever used. During the past eighteen years I have tried nearly all the prominent cough medicines on the market, but say, and with pleasure, too, that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best of all.

Speaking of the propensity of Kansas to vote bonds to railroads Noble Prentis says: "A Kansas man caupot keep house without a railroad. A Kansas baby, as soon as it can stand on its legs can run from one end of a moving passenger coach to the other. It is built that way. Kansas has paid the railroads and the railroads have paid Kansas.

Who Was Your Great Grandfather?

The Detroit Journal desires to receive, by postal card, the address of all living male and female descendants of revolutionary officers and soldiers of 1776 and, when possible, the name and state of the ancestor. Wonder if W. H. Brearley, proprietor of the Detroit Journal, is contemplating a raid upon the national treasury?

Jefferson Davis in his autobiography thus describes the abandonment of Richmond: "That event was not quite unexpected, but it occurred be-fore the conditions were fulfilled under which General Lee contemplated re-

A KING OUTWITTED.

After the close of the Seven Year's War, Frederick the Great was for a time very busy with the long-neglected affairs of his capital, so that even his favorite flute was, for awhile, neglected. Among the officers who had particularly distinguished themselves during the war; says the New York Ledger, was a Captain of Grenadiers, named Ritter, who had lost an arm at Buckersdorf. But the lost arm was not his only mishap. He had falien sick in hospital—so very sick that when peace was declared, and an account taken of the army, he was reported dead. But he survived and was at reported dead. But he survived and was at length able to make his way to Berlin, where he sought an interview with the King, but he sought an interview with the King, but Frederick was engaged, and would not see him. Captain Ritter came again and again, demanding that a pension should be granted him; but the courtiers whom he saw could not help him, for the King would not see him. In the first place, Frederick distilled exceedingly to be importuned; and secondly, he did not wish to pay more pensions than he could help.

One day the chamberlain entered the royal presence, and announced that Captain Ritter domanded audience.

Ritter demanded audience "Tell him to go about his business," cried

"I have told him so, sire; and he answers me that his only business is to see to the getting of his pension. If your Majesty will but see him. Poor fellow! he has lost an arm, and has otherwise suffered. If your Grace would but listen to him just one mo

"Donner" exclaimed the impatient mon-arch. "I will listen to him exactly one mo-ment. He may come in and speak just two words. If he venture more I'll banish him from the capital."

Shortly afterward the maimed Captain, having been duly informed of the King's niggardly grant, entered the presence-chamber, and advanced to the royal seat. In his hand he held a written petition for a pension; and, sinking upon his knee, he held

"How now, man?" demanded Frederick. "What do you want?" " Stre-Sign!" answered the old soldier.

He bowed his head, and said no more. The King appreciated the humor of the thing; and with a hearty laugh he took the petition, and appended thereto his auto-

He went only occasionally to grand dinners and large entertainments. He knew very well it was his wit which was invited; as he said, "They hire me on wages." He went everywhere without bending the knee. One day, at the house of some Marquis, whose name I have forgotten, a nobleman made way for him to enter the dining-room before him. The Marquis, observing this ceremony, addressed the nobleman: "Oh. my dear Count, don't be so ceremonious; he is only a poet." Piron repelled the insult like a man of spirit. He raised his head proudly, and went in first, remarking: "Since our titles are known, I take my rank."
